250 years of Stoltzfuses at the Nicholas Stoltzfus Homestead

By S. Nicholas Stoltzfus April 1st, 2021

250 years ago this year, Nicholas Stoltzfus and his son Christian co-purchased what is today known as the Nicholas Stoltzfus Homestead from Thomas & Catherine Youngman. A year earlier they had purchased land adjacent to the 1771 purchase, and in that deed, it states that the Stoltzfuses were from Leacock Township in Lancaster County. So what does that mean?

Nicholas & Anna (Bachmann) Stoltzfus and their four children immigrated to Pennsylvania from Germany in 1766. We don't know where the family lived for their first four years, but the 1770 deed record provides us with a clue. What makes the most sense is that the Stoltzfuses first lived in Lancaster County from 1766 to 1770; during this time, it seems likely that they lived with another Amish family and saved up enough money to purchase their own land. Although we aren't entirely sure who they might have lived with, we do know that the Christian Schmucker family and the Abraham Kurtz family had farms in Leacock Township and were friends of the Stoltzfuses, so those are two possibilities.

When the Stoltzfuses moved to Berks in 1770, they became a part of the Reading Amish congregation. Amish farmer John Gerber owned farmland adjacent to the Stoltzfuses and Christian married his daughter, Catherine in 1774. This was also the year that Nicholas died. Although we don't know where he was buried, some records indicate that Nicholas was laid to rest on his farm. After Nicholas' death in 1774, Christian Stoltzfus inherited his father's property. Christian and his family lived at the homestead over a decade. In 1787, Christian and his second wife Elizabeth (Lantz née King) sold the homestead to his brother-in-law John Schmucker in 1787. John and Barbara (Stoltzfus) Schmucker owned the homestead for 14 years, until they sold it to their son-in-law Solomon King in 1801. Solomon and Veronica (Schmucker) King only lived at the homestead for three years. In 1804, the Kings sold it outside the family to a local farmer named Daniel Myer/Meyer and moved to Lancaster County.

For 34 years—from 1771 to 1804—three generations of the Stoltzfus family lived and farmed at what is today known as the Nicholas Stoltzfus Homestead. And then nearly 200 years went by and no Stoltzfuses were involved with the property. Many different families came and went—the Meyers, the Riegels, the Madeiras, the Templins, the Grings—until William Sheidy sold it to Textile Machine Works in 1924. This was the textile company founded by Henry Janssen and Ferdinand Thun in the late 1800s; in their heyday, they managed the largest full-fashioned knitting mill in the world. The homestead remained in corporate ownership for the rest of the 20th century. By 1986, Thun Investment Company had deeded it over to one of its subsidiaries, Tulpehocken, Ltd. In 1988, Harvey and Pauline Schlegel—the tenants who had been living at the homestead—were evicted. The homestead was slated to be demolished, in order to make room for the construction of the 422/222 bypass. Thankfully, the demolition was averted and the stone house was saved from destruction. By now, descendants were aware that of the value of the property and its connection to their Stoltzfus ancestors, and a dedicated group was formed to preserve the property: the Nicholas Stoltzfus Homestead Preservation Committee. In 2000, Country Meadows purchased the property from Tulpehocken Ltd. and granted a license for Stoltzfus descendants to come onto the property to restore it. In 2015, Country Meadows deeded the property over to the Nicholas Stoltzfus Homestead Preservation Committee.

And so now, 250 years later, our Stoltzfus family once again owns this property. Today, the stone house is no longer nestled in fields of corn and wheat and the peace of country life. Instead, it is now surrounded by rows of roads and byways and the cacophony of city life. And yet—the quiet stone house endures.

In the afterword to my last book, I posed this question: why does this old house matter?

And here was my reply: The Nicholas Stoltzfus Homestead is a symbol of our heritage. It is a place where we can educate ourselves, our family, and the general public about the values that we cherish: faith, humility, hard work, peace, and charity to those in need. Our Anabaptist ancestors held these values so dearly that they were willing to give their lives for what they believed in. The Homestead is a connection to this heritage. It is a beacon for us when we have lost our way or when we are trapped in the hustle and bustle of our harried and busy lives.

When we gather here at the Homestead, we take a break from our day-to-day lives, and we enter into a different time zone, a place that gives us space to reconnect with one another and our past. Hopefully, the visit to this realm sparks something in our hearts, which we then pass on to the next generation. Like the eternal flame, each generation must choose to tend to it and keep it lit for future generations.

Like all things on this Earth, one day this old house will succumb to the wears and tears of time, and crumble back to its dusty origins. As someone who cares for this house, I hope that this day will be far, far in the future.

But when that day comes—when we no longer have a Nicholas Stoltzfus Homestead where we can gather—we will continue onward. Because even stronger than these walls of stone is our family and faith heritage. This is the light that is housed within the Homestead, the light housed within our hearts. And, in the midst of the wars and pandemics and other crises of worldly concerns, this is something we can take comfort in.

S. Nicholas Stoltzfus served as the caretaker of the Nicholas Stoltzfus Homestead from 2018 to 2020. Most recently, he is the author of "In the Footsteps of My Stoltzfus Family: A Genealogy Memoir". He lives a few miles from the Homestead and works as the editorial director of Plain Values magazine.

Chamber Pots and Snow Drifts: Surviving my First Pennsylvania Winter

By Esther Y. Stoltzfus April 12th, 2021

If you are reading this you may very likely know that I am a recent transplant to Pennsylvania. Not only a transplant; this is the dramatic uprooting of a die-hard born and bred north Florida girl who lived in, and loved, the south for nearly six decades. Ya'll that is a lot of years! If a person would have told me five years ago that I would be moving to Pennsylvania I would have been the first to laugh at such nonsense! Why would I leave the land of sunshine and flowers blooming in my garden twelve months out of the year? Why would I leave the luscious fried cornbread and hushpuppies and okra and the best raw oysters ever put in your mouth? Why would I want to leave the land of pine trees and magnolias?

I would have a nice savings account if I had a dollar every time somebody has asked me, "Why would you move north instead of south because that is backwards for older people?"

As the saying goes, man plans and God smiles. Hurricane Michael moved over us in 2018, packing 140 mph winds for over fours hours and we watched in horror and fear as 90% of our sanctuary trees almost gently blew over—roots and all---covering our entire property. We watched the literal devastation of our barn and office and prayed for God's mercy and protection. We were spared and were overwhelmed by kindness of family and friends across the country as we tried to find a path to recovery.

However, that was the beginning of God prying my fingers away from a place that I had dearly loved. As we attempted to rebuild and move on, we realized that many things would not recover for a while. Even before this, Elam was being recruited by Paul Kurtz to do something for the Nicholas Stoltzfus Homestead---tell its story—be a spokesperson---help get it on the map---all sorts of ideas were being floated around and I had listened from a distance, not paying much attention.

However, after Hurricane Michael we tried to sort out long term plans and it became obvious the push and pull of staying or leaving was a real discussion to be had in our home.

Doors open and closed, ultimately leading us to put our home on the market and sell our beloved place making the monumental to decision to move to the homstead as long term volunteer caretakers. It meant downsizing from 3000 sq feet to 1300. It meant saying goodbye to a dearly loved horse, goats, and pet chickens. And it meant embracing a new life in Pennsylvania which included winter.

When I realized there was no escaping the cold, I did the sensible thing and bought heavy coats with hoods, rubber boots, scarves, and long johns. I had Vitamin D and bright lights in my kitchen to prevent seasonal sadness. I tried to learn to knit for about 10 minutes and hated 8 of those minutes. I hung bird feeders and bought a flowering plant for my kitchen window. And I bought good sturdy tires for safe driving. I thought I was prepared.

When the first snow came, I was mesmerized and stood watching it gently fall for hours. It was absolutely beautiful.

When the second snow came it was a blizzard and the Pennsylvanians took it in stride. All 21 inches of it. Now this was a problem for us southerners. You see, the only snow removal equipment we had was a shovel. Yep. ONE SHOVEL. And we had a driveway that is over 100 feet long and we were snowed in. We bravely shoveled and shoveled and shoveled. We watched in dismay when the county snow plow pushed snow back into our shoveled path and we shoveled some more. Eventually I said to Elam, "This is not going to work." And we finally got someone to remove the rest of the snow and after the sticker shock of that, we purchased a good used sturdy snow blower, which Elam used with skill and a big smile. And I watched from inside with an even bigger smile.

We had snow on the ground for more than a month. Drifts of snow covered the property and it was truly beautiful. We stayed warm and managed to be active.

In between snow and rain and cold, we continued to meet people who visited the homestead. We hosted several groups of school children and got great feedback on ways to make the place authentic and interesting.

I bought old tin cups and other ancient relics to put in the kitchen. I was on the lookout for braided rugs and was thrilled when a beautiful rug was gifted to the homestead by Phil and Lori Stoltzfus. Another family had willed an antique willow chair to the homestead. Others had bequeathed books, old clothes, and a tablecloth.

One of the subjects I kept thinking about was that delicate business of bathrooms, or the lack thereof. I went down the rabbit trail of solutions during the colonial times of 1775 and discovered chamber pots. And no, they couldn't be the enamel pots of the 19th century. And no, it was not necessary that they were pretty with nice flowers on them. I was on a serious hunt! Imagine my delight to find—not one—but 2 chamber pots—old white earthenware pots—sturdy and plain and in perfect condition. One even included a basin. Being thrilled to find a chamber pot is a bit weird, but I was thrilled.

Today the snow is gone. The grass is green and daffodils gently wave in the breeze at the homestead. Poppies and larkspur are peeking through and I can't wait for beds of fresh flowers!

When I walk inside the old house, I smile and imagine Nicholas and Anna being there in 1771. I picture them bravely facing the wildness that was then Pennsylvania. And yet in my minds eye, they had sufficient utensils to cook and eat with, chairs to sit on, a rug for comfort, and a nice chamber pot to use so they didn't have to face the bitter cold dark night in search of a bathroom break.

This picture makes my first Pennsylvania winter seem like a walk in the park. I am happy to say I survived and am still smiling. I have to admit that sights of spring make my smile bigger but ya'll, I can do this!

As we work hard to make the Nicholas Stoltzfus Homestead a place to share with family and friends and lovers of history, we are thrilled to be entrusted with the mission of showcasing life in colonial times through the lens of Nicholas Stoltzfus and his family. We want to make this place be a place of welcome and a place to make memories and learn about our shared history.
